Tradition inherited with passion
Elegant dance is offered for peace and bountiful harvest

The festival is held on the second Sunday of October each year at Yokone Fujii Shrine in Sosaku, Yokone-machi, Obu. Children dance elegantly, a Sanbaso dance for peace and bountiful crops is performed, and antique floats carefully preserved by various groups are offered at the shrine. They are all from the Edo Period, and the Sanbaso dance is Obu's intangible cultural heritage. The floats are the city's tangible cultural heritage. The floats are about six meters high, three meters wide, and four meters deep, and they are decorated with intricate carvings and gold leaf.

Dance in gratitude to bumper crops

Sanbaso dance is the festival's highlight. On the stage set up in front of the floats, three children, one from each team, perform the Shikisanbaso. One of them elegantly presents the Sanbaso. The adults of each group pass down the movement and bearing to the children.

A city that supports children and childcare

OBU 50th Anniversary
City Guidebook

Obu is liveable as it makes raising children straightforward. It has an environment that lets moms and dads raise kids with a sense of security.

The city's elementary and junior high schools have introduced ICT education ahead of other municipalities, and school-cooked lunch fills the tummies of growing children. These are the reasons why Obu's children thrive.

ICT Education

The city promotes ICT education as it takes advantage of the teachers' know-how and introducing electronic blackboards and tablets to all elementary and junior high schools to enable children to learn how to use ICT correctly and effectively. ICT support staff are also sent to give detailed lessons. The humanoid robot, Pepper, was introduced to four junior high schools in the first year of Reiwa, and each school is engaged in new and creative efforts.

Kids Station

The Kids Station has many networking groups for parents with similar-age children, including the New-Born Baby Parents Club, Pre-Mommy Club, and Multiple Birth Club. Parents can talk about their child-raising concerns and anxieties with others who are experiencing similar issues. They can also seek advice from the station's on-site nursery staff. The station also has a support system in place, including the Family Support Center, for families facing issues raising children.

Lunch prepared in schools

Every elementary, junior high, and nursery school has a kitchen where lunch is prepared on-site. Children can enjoy delicious and hygienically cooked lunch, whether it is a hot or cold dish, as everything is served immediately after cooking. The city also promotes food and nutrition education. The schools offer distinctive menus prepared with local ingredients and ones that follow observances. They also have cooks trained in dealing with food allergies who provide individualized care.

A fitness boosting project

The project encourages pre-school children to increase their fitness through exercise and play to build their bodies so they can lead healthy lives. Children get excited by the simple activities and games, including running, jumping, and ball-throwing. The sessions are held at the Children's Center (Senior Welfare) and nursery schools. They are to be introduced at some elementary schools from 2020.

Pediatric medicine

Just as the city implemented free healthcare for children up to junior high school age from 2007, ahead of the rest of Japan, Obu provides full support to parents in raising children. It offers various assistance, including prenatal health checks, postnatal and baby health checks for mothers and babies, shouldering part of the expenses for new-born hearing tests, and so on. The city also has the prefecture's only health clinic for children, the Aichi Children's Health and Medical Center.

Nursery schools

As of April 2020, the city had 12 public and 18 private nursery schools. Since the city foresaw an increase in pre-school childcare needs, as more women joined the workforce, it worked on attracting private businesses by developing a unique subsidy system besides increasing public nurseries' enrolment capacity. The schools are actively engaged in interacting with local residents, and entire communities are supporting childcare.

Guiding Principles

Develop a sustainable city through new ideas

Become a Healthy City

Achieving a Healthy City

The city's future

Obu, a sustainable city of well-being you want to inhabit forever.

Live in the city forever

In expanding social connections and the network of support as well as enhancing the city's function and appeal, the city is becoming a place where residents feel its charms and warmth and wish to live here forever.

Obu, a sustainable city of well-being

The city's sustainability perspective is based on a future-minded concept where it continues to make progress through repeated improvements and reforms. It is endeavoring to become a sustainable and highly spirited place where the people who live, work, gather, and study in the city can thrive and enjoy healthy lives.

centered on five areas

Obu City Citizens Charter

We, the citizens of Obu, establish this Citizens Charter with a wish that the city will make limitless progress.

- One Let us cherish nature and create a beautiful hometown.
- Two Let us enrich our knowledge and nurture a rich spirit.
- Three Let us build healthy and happy homes.
- Four Let us be proud of our jobs and become outstanding citizens.
- Five Let us follow the rules and create a bright and peaceful city.

Obu is a crucial junction of traffic that connects Nagoya with Chita and Mikawa. It is a liveable place that is attractive for its convenience, enhanced by its proximity to JR Tokaido Nagoya Station (15 min.) and a network of expressways, and a rich natural environment. Obu Village came into being as seven villages merged in 1906, establishing the city's present area. The grant of town status was implemented in 1915. On September 1, 1970, the town became the 24th city of Aichi. For half a century, the city has worked with its citizens, organizations, and businesses in making Obu a Healthy City. It will continue to grow as a mature city.

A Message from the Mayor

We are doing all we can to make Obu a sustainable Healthy City that people will want to live all their lives.

Mayor Hideto Okamura

Obu, which became the Prefecture's 24th city on September 1, 1970, has been steadily progressing in becoming a Healthy City, a guiding principle, since its municipal organization. The city's population exceeded 92,000, surpassing the original 49,000 short, in the commemorative year of its 50th anniversary. I am sincerely thankful that it is all due to our predecessors' ceaseless efforts and everyone's generosity.

The second year of Reiwa is the year Obu City has embarked on the 6th Comprehensive Plan, our road map for developing the new generation. Our future vision is set on Obu to become a sustainable and healthy city, where people will want to continue to inhabit. We will advance with creating a sustainable city where our citizens feel the city's charms and warmth and thrive and enjoy healthy lives. As the whole world faces unprecedented crises due to the Covid-19 pandemic, our citizens' lives have been completely transformed. Obu City has had no choice but to postpone or cancel some events, including the city's 50th-anniversary project. We must advance toward a brighter future without giving up, no matter the circumstances. Even the darkest night will end. Let us venture into the next 50 years.
